Background

In her current position in the Public Service Commission, Dr Sedibe brings many years of experience working in both the education and skills space within the NGO sector and in government at both a national and provincial level. Dr Sedibe will draw on her research which formed the basis of her PhD to explore what leadership competencies should underpin an effective public service sector. Her PhD entitled: “Developing a complexity leadership competency framework for the Governance and Administration Cluster of the South African Public Service” was motivated by concerns regarding the unevenness or lack of appropriate leadership competencies, behaviours, and skills to make the government cluster system effective.
